Frontline's Innovative Collaboration

Trained Professionals

- Certified Substance Abuse Professionals
- Medical Professionals
- Clergy
- Mental Health Professionals

Peer-To-Peer Program Format

- The Center for Substance Abuse Research at the University of Maryland reports that the 12-25 year age group responds significantly better to education by their peers in overcoming addiction dependency and in maintaining their recovery.

Frontline's team of young adult volunteers who have successfully restarted their lives is a positive, unique factor in our positive success rate.

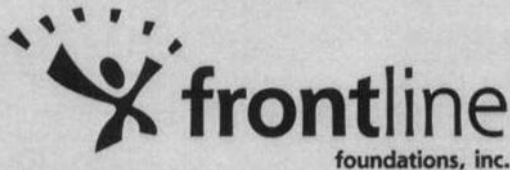

Communities of Faith

The National Center on Substance Abuse at Columbia University states "spiritually based support programs are more likely to help clients recover and maintain their sobriety."

Multi-denominational churches, clergy and volunteers from faith based communities provide resources and support to our young adults.

Judicial System

Frontline continues to build strong, positive relationships while working directly with our county judges, officers and officials in the court system. This collaboration creates a truly comprehensive and cost effective solution for our community.
